In short, if you want results you'll have to sacrifice flexibility, and I don't think you want to do that. I've tried using my.object.get.object() and my.object.get.methods() to try to get the methods / fields I want in my model. I'm trying to be less generic than you are and have a more specific list of methods I want to get, but I don't know if that's possible using these objects. A: Have a look at There is a QDomDocument class available, which you can use to manipulate the XML file. Saliva can be obtained from a person without the person being conscious. Saliva, and the composition of saliva, has been analyzed to help in the medical diagnosis of a person. Unfortunately, saliva collection is not always accurate and results can be affected by the person's nervous system. The purity of a saliva sample from a person has been an issue with respect to the integrity of the results of the saliva analysis. A saliva sample may have an increased level of genetic material, such as DNA, from the person being tested that may be transferred to a laboratory specimen collection device used to collect a saliva sample. For example, a sterile tip or swab is used to collect saliva from a person and the tip may be discarded in the collection device or shared with a laboratory specimen collector. In addition, the laboratory specimen collector may include a brush used to collect saliva from a person or may be one-use and disposable. Disposal of the brush in the collection device may include the brush passing through a slot in the collection device. To reduce the chance of the brush passing from the collection device to a laboratory specimen collector, the brush may be introduced into a brush tube or cup that is disposed in the collection device. This configuration requires the laboratory specimen collector to have a brush tube or brush cup for each person being tested, which may become a problem if the laboratory collects many saliva samples from many people. This problem may become more serious if several collection devices with brushes or collection devices with brushes are used by one laboratory. In addition, there is a possibility that traces of a sample collector, such as a brush or tube, from another person may be present on
